VITAMINS:

Vitamins are organic compounds which are essential for the development of normal tissue growth and maintenance.

AMINO ACIDS:

The role of amino acids goes beyond building blocks they are essential for the synthesis of proteins, enzymes, hormones, neurotransmitters, metabolic pathways, and just about every function that takes place within the body.

MINERALS:

The minerals are essential for a variety of bodily functions. They are important for building strong bones, blood, skin, feathers, nerve function, muscle and for metabolic processes such as those that turn the food we eat into energy.

ELECTROLYTES:

Electrolytes are the smallest of chemicals that are important for the cells in the body to function and allow the body to work. Electrolytes such as sodium, potassium, and others are critical in allowing cells to generate energy, the stability of their walls, and to function in general. They generate electricity, contract muscles, move water and fluids within the body, and participate in many other activities.
